Muslim Extremists Banned ... Who's Next?

The decision by the Home Secretary to ban the, Muslim Against Crusades group, using anti-terror legislation has me worried. Although MAC was a hate-filled group of scumbags, they were not, in my opinion, terrorists. Their activities were easily controlled using existing criminal law such as the Public Order Act. When a politician such as the Home Secretary bans one unpopular group, it leaves me to wonder who is next. We remember 18B!

Emma West: No Justice

In today's Britain, the forthright comments that Emma West made towards fellow travellers on a Croydon tram will always invite prosecution. But where is the justice that remanded this young mother in custody? Initially it was claimed she was being detained for her own protection after threats against her were made on the internet, but when she pleaded not guilty at magistrate's court, she was again remanded in custody, this time for four weeks. So Emma was destined to spend Christmas in prison away from her family. Fortunately, her legal team appealed the decision and Emma has now been bailed, but, every week, drug dealers, rapists and other genuine threats to our society are given bail. So why was Emma remanded in the first place?. Her friends claim it is simply because she is White. I for one, cannot find any fault in their argument.

Finally, this is the time of year that we, who can, like to spend time with our families. But, please spare a thought for those who cannot. We have members of our armed forces, away from home, risking their lives daily, in somebody else's war. We have fellow Nationalists imprisoned throughout the world, for simply expressing their opinions. They are fighting OUR fight. Please do not forget them.

A Merry Yule!

BRITONS IN POVERTY

While Overseas Aid Increases

Every two minutes of the day, a British family faces losing their home. As a result of the recession, cuts, the high cost of living and rising unemployment, the total number of families in Britain being made homeless between January and September this year increased by 13%. Fuel poverty, where households have to spend 10% or more to heat their homes to an acceptable standard, is expected to affect over 4 million households in Britain, and many Britons will face a choice of eating, or paying their rising fuel bills.

Pensioners are the hardest hit by fuel poverty, and it is expected that almost 3000 pensioners will die this winter as a direct result of fuel poverty.

Food or Fuel? A choice of Many Pensioners

Yet in these austere times, our British government has not only refused to slash overseas aid, but plans to commit a fixed figure of 0.7% of our national income (GDP) to our overseas aid budget over the next three years. This means that while Britons are dying of cold, or being made homeless, our government will be spending £29 billion in overseas aid!

This figure must not be confused with "humanitarian aid", where both government, and voluntary organisations, contribute, to life-threatening events such as a drought or flood. This is money earmarked for "development". So where does the money go?

Well, Britain donated £8 million to Robert Mugabe's Zimbabwe, to buy 1000 Land Rovers. Britain was given an assurance by the Mugabe regime that they would be used for "peaceful purposes". Once delivered they were handed over to the Zimbabwe police who equipped them as "riot control" vehicles to crush opposition demonstrators!

Even more bizarre, was the donation of £2.4 million to the Pitcairn Islands, which equates to £51,000 for each of the 48 inhabitants of the islands. These islands hold the largest proportion of paedophiles in the world. A third of its adult men have faced child sex charges, including the rape of children as young as seven. The former mayor was found guilty of child sex charges, and the current mayor has been charged with possessing child pornography. British aid was spent, we are told, on improving public services!

Incredibly, Britain will continue to pay £1.4 billion in aid to India, which itself can afford to donate £3.5 billion in aid to Africa! India also has its own nuclear programme and a space project costing £2 billion a year.

Britons Made Homeless While Aid Budget Increases

As Britons face years of austerity, rising unemployment, rising homelessness, and increasing fuel poverty, our masters continue to shovel British taxpayer's cash, to wealthy nations, and into the pockets of African despots. It must stop!

Labour Commissar Fails to Stop BNP Conference

An audacious attempt by a local Labour councillor, to prevent the British National Party holding their annual conference at a venue in Liverpool, failed miserably when the BNP threatened legal action against the individual for "abusing public office".

Joe Anderson, a local councillor, and leader of the Labour council in Liverpool, arrived at the conference venue, and in front of several witnesses, threatened the landlord of the premises that he would go to the licensing authorities and seek to have the landlord's licence retracted unless he immediately closed down the BNP conference and eject those attending.

The BNP advised the landlord and Councillor Anderson that a councillor does not have the authority to make such demands and that he was potentially guilty of an abuse of public office. A senior police officer present confirmed to the landlord that the councillor did not have the authority to close the conference and was witness to a letter from the BNP being handed to the Labour Commissar advising him that unless he retracted his threats and demands they would contemplate legal action against him.

the "Leuchter Report", which used scientific principles to prove that wartime gas chambers could not be used for mass extermination.

In his speech, which Gunter Deckert translated into German, Mr Leuchter explained his criticism of the authorised version of the Holocaust. But, for translating opinions, which are themselves criminal offences in democratic Germany, Mr Deckert was judged to have committed a criminal offence! He was charged with "Holocaust denial" and after two retrials, was sentenced to two years in prison.

Previous attempts have been made to have Mr Deckert banned from entering Britain but this is difficult as he is an EU citizen.

Breakfast Favourite Goes Halal

One of Britain's favourite breakfast cereals has become "Halal Certified" to meet the dietary requirements of the Muslim community. All boxes of Kellogg's cornflakes now carry a "Halal Certified" logo, on the side of each box.

Halal food for Muslims is obligatory under "Sharia Law" and the certification is awarded by the Halal Food Authority.

Kellogg's confirmed the changes claiming it was "due to legislation for our multi-cultural society".

Some Christian organisations are calling for a boycott of all Kellogg's products, while others are demanding equal treatment with Muslims via the introduction of "non-Halal" cornflakes, complete with a Christian symbol on the boxes.

"Racist Rant" Woman Remanded in Custody.

A 34 year-old woman seen on an internet video clip shouting and swearing at black and Asian passengers on a Croydon tram, was arrested and remanded in custody. The video, which had been selectively edited, showed Emma West, holding her child on her lap while shouting at non-white fellow passengers, "why don't you go back to your own fg country" and similar comments. The video clip does not show what provoked Ms West. Claims that Mrs West was remanded in custody for "her own protection" were dismissed by friends of Mrs West, who are claiming that she was only being held in custody because she is white. As Ms West has opted for a trial in front of a jury, she was remanded in custody until January. This decision is extremely unusual as such remands are normally only applied where the accused is likely to leave the country if given bail, or cases involving severe violence which could result in a long prison sentence. The Middle-East

War Crimes and Sharia Law

Throughout the past 12 months, League Sentinel has been voicing the opinion that Britain should not attempt to involve itself in Middle-Eastern politics. We recognise that the Arab mind and culture does not embrace democracy and a democratic system that our government think should be good for them.

Whenever "rebels" in Arab nations have asked for support and assistance in achieving their "democratic rights" from their oppressive governments, Britain and the United States have been quick to respond. Assuming that Arab minds accept the democratic values that are normal in the West has been a major mistake.

Religious leaders, warlords and tribal leaders have no part in making national policy decisions in the West, but the same characters are a vital part of any national infrastructure in the Middle-East. Instead, the West has listened to western educated "exiles" who have come to the fore in any anti-government demonstration, claiming to represent the demonstrators, and claiming to be the core of a new revolutionary government which will install a democratic system in their dissident state. Britain has been to the forefront in granting recognition to the "rebels" without understanding their real motivation. Power and Revenge.

Tunisia

Tunisian rebels were the first dissidents of the Arab nations to demand a change of government. Not knowing how the West would react, not knowing whether the West would support the country's rulers or not, they played the "democracy" card.

The result? Tacit support for the uprising from the West, and a successful change of government. Power:

The new Islamic government has decreed that Tunisia will now build, not towards a secular, progressive country, but towards a Muslim Caliphate, where Mullah's rule and Sharia law reigns. Revenge: Dozens of prominent members of the previous government have vanished without trace.

Egypt

When demonstrators took to the streets of Cairo in February this year, our naïve Prime Minister hailed the protests as "people power" and welcomed their demands to replace the President, Hosni Mubarak, with a new era of democracy. Instead the army took control, albeit with the promise of elections in six months time. Now, several months later, the demonstrators are back on the streets, but now the army are their oppressors, not their protectors.

Ahead of the elections, the army appears to have made an agreement with the Muslim

Brotherhood, (pictured above) favourites to win the election; that a Muslim Brotherhood government would not interfere in "military matters", in return for support from the army during the elections. Under President Mubarak, the Muslim Brotherhood was banned. Under army rule, they are a welcome ally. Already, Egypt's Coptic Christian minority has come under attack from militant Islamists, with desecration of Christian churches and savage beatings leading to several deaths. Is this a taste of things to come? The Muslim Brotherhood is committed to the eventual, implementation of Sharia law throughout Egypt

Libya

For many years, and for good reason, Colonel Gaddafi, the ruler of Libya, was a hate figure in Britain. Providing the IRA with weapons to kill British soldiers, the murder of PC Yvonne Fletcher and possibly the Lockerbie atrocity, were all the work of the Gaddafi regime. So when demonstrators took to the streets to demand the overthrow of the regime, and the introduction of democracy, the British government immediately supported the "rebels".

A "National Transitional Council" was established, with its representatives coming mainly from within the ranks of Libyan exiles living comfortable lives in London and Paris. Seemingly, none of the West's intelligence agencies bothered to inform their governments of the potential risks of a pro-Western dictatorship, which gave equal rights to Christians, forcibly, and sometimes brutally, oppressed Muslim extremists, being overthrown by tribal warlords and Islamic jihadists. As the Libyan regime fought to repress the coming revolution, the "rebels" asked for support from NATO. US President Obama, feared being seen taking a major role in Libya, careful not to commit the US to any action which might harm his chances of re-election, and so it was Britain's, David Cameron who publicly took the lead, supported by France's President Sarkozy. The opening tactic was to impose a "no fly zone" to prevent Gaddafi's air force bombing the rebels into submission. Within weeks, NATO was supplying weapons to the rebels, and "specialist advisors" to act as instructors. In reality, NATO had joined the rebels. Our air force had become the rebels air force, bombing government bases and troops, and our military personnel on the ground, were little more than mercenaries. As rebel victories spread, Amnesty International raised concerns that victorious rebel groups were committing atrocities against government supporters. Anarchy reigned! When Gaddafi was finally captured, the National Transitional Council claimed he had been shot dead in a gun battle between his troops and rebel forces. In reality, the world saw via You Tube, the Libyan leader murdered. Unarmed, and with his hands in the air, he was brutally beaten, stabbed and finally shot dead. What we didn't see was his body being sodomised with a rifle bayonet by "our" side. Britain and its NATO allies had facilitated the taking of power in Libya, by an out of control mob of war criminals and thugs!

Libya no longer features on our daily news programmes. The camera teams have gone home. There is nobody to report the looting of the homes of Gaddafi supporters, the removal from hospitals of patients thought to be Gaddafi supporters by armed rebels, or the discovery of 53 bodies of Gaddafi soldiers, who died with a bullet in the head, with their hands tied behind their backs.

Gaddafi: Publicly murdered by "Our Side"

Nobody reports of the 10,000 men, women and children imprisoned by the new regime, being routinely beaten, raped and tortured by "our" side.

And "our" side has suddenly turned from, "ordinary Libyans who want freedom and democracy," to groups of power hungry Islamists, who once united, will become a major threat to the West, and world peace.

In Tripoli, the local warlord has imposed Sharia law, complete with floggings and judicial executions, and in Benghazi, the black flag of Al Qaeda, flies triumphantly above the courthouse.

Another "Victory" for Britain and its NATO allies!

Look Back at History

Fascism in Britain: (Part 3)

THE NEW PARTY

In previous issues of League Sentinel we featured both the British Fascisti, formed in 1923 by Miss Rotha Lintorn-Orman, and the Imperial Fascist League, founded by Arnold Leese in 1928. The next step in the development of British Fascism came in 1931, when Sir Oswald Mosley, a Labour MP and a member of the Labour National Executive, resigned and formed, The New Party.

Mosley, who had been an MP for both the Conservative and Labour parties, had become disenchanted with the stagnation of the mainstream parties, and supported by six other Labour MPs, The New Party was formed. Britain was still in the grip of the Great Depression which had started with the Wall Street crash just two years earlier and unemployment was over the 2 million mark.

London-born Lewis became one of Mosley's personal bodyguards and stood with him when Mosley addressed a crowd of over 20,000 in Glasgow on September 20th 1931. Lewis, who was Jewish, also stood as the New Party candidate for Whitechapel, East London, in the 1931 General Election.

Mosley as a Labour MP

Mosley and "Kid" Lewis

Mosley proposed a radical programme of public works thus reducing unemployment, the introduction of import tariffs, giving protection to our manufacturing industry and therefore boosting the value of sterling. The newspaper Baron, Lord Nuffield donated £50,000 to the party and Mosley launched a party newspaper, Action. Without the benefit of television most political campaigning was conducted by means of outdoor rallies and street corner meetings. These were often disrupted by political opponents, and so Mosley employed the then captain of the English Rugby team, Peter Howard, to establish and train a team of security stewards to protect his meetings. So effective and enthusiastic were these against political opponents they became known as the "Biff-Boys". Also joining Mosley was the former World Welterweight boxing champion, Ted "Kid" Lewis.

The New Party's first electoral contest was at a by-election for the Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancashire, seat in April 1931, just a few weeks after the party had been formed. The New Party candidate fought the election campaign on the financial state of Britain and broadly based on the "Mosley Memorandum" which had been narrowly rejected by the Labour Party conference. Designed to both generate new employment and to protect existing workers against foreign competition, the program appealed to Labour voters and the New Party's 16% of the vote was sufficient to split the Labour vote allowing a Conservative to capture the seat.

Despite the ineffectual performance at the Ashton by-election two more existing MPs joined the New Party, one from the Ulster Unionists and one from the Liberal Party. Six months later, in the General Election of October 1931, the New Party could only manage to contest 24 seats, and no candidates were elected. Mosley became disillusioned with the British parliamentary system and in January 1932 he decided to visit Rome to see how Italy had changed following the Fascist takeover masterminded by Benito Mussolini.

Mosley and Mussolini had much in common, both started their political careers as socialists, and both had experienced the bond of Comradeship established in the trenches of the Great War.

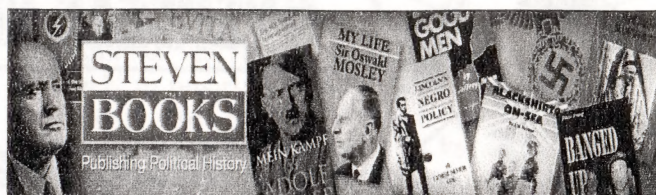

Mosley met Mussolini and was tremendously impressed with his achievements, and what he called "the modern movement" ... Fascism.

Mosley and Mussolini. Both had a lot in common

On his return to Britain Mosley found that not all of his New Party officials shared his enthusiasm for "the modern movement," so rather than see a damaging split, Mosley simply wound up the party. He spent the rest of the summer designing a Fascist programme suitable for Britain entitled "The Greater Britain" and this became the basis of the policy of the British Union of Fascists which was launched at Great George Street, London on the 1st of October 1932. A new badge, featuring the Italian "Fasces" symbol on a Union Jack background, accompanied a revolutionary new policy for Britain.

And so began "the great adventure"

For More on British Fascism

This booklet was written by the Leader of the British Union of Fascists in the very early days of the movement's founding. It gives a clear exposition of the imperatives which drove the author's decision to adopt fascism as the answer to Britain's economic problems.

Price: £3.80

Mosley had been a member of the Labour Government. He was given the task of reducing unemployment. He developed a scheme which was put forward as the famous Mosley Memorandum. It was only by an unhappy fluke that it was rejected at the Labour Party National Congress. In complete frustration at the impossibility of getting anything done with the orthodox politicians Mosley left to form his own party, the New Party.

The two protestors climbed on to the roof of FIFA's headquarters and unveiled a banner condemning FIFA's decision as "an insult to our war dead".

After surrendering peacefully to Swiss police, the EDL protestors, Steve Lennon and Kevin Carroll, were taken to court and fined £3000 each.

Silly Games in Germany

While the Eurozone looks towards Germany to give leadership and resolve the crisis surrounding the banks, and the survival of the single currency, some parts of Germany have more urgent problems. The North-German area of Tumlaur-Koog, is a fertile farming area, reclaimed from the sea in a programme launched by the ruling NSDAP, and completed in 1935. To commemorate this wonderful achievement, Hermann Goring, then the governor of Prussia, visited the community of Tumlaur-Koog to inaugurate the newly reclaimed land. At the inauguration ceremony, Goring presented the community with a memorial bell. Embossed into the bell was Goring's name, the date, and an inscription, "German farmers are the eternal blood source of the German people", wording, very much in keeping with the "Blood & Soil" ideology of the time. The bell was housed in a wooden tower, and survived the ravages of war and weather until the tower collapsed in 2008. A new tower was erected and, as the bell was cracked, a new bell was purchased. The community's leaders agreed unanimously that the old bell was an important part of the community's history and should remain on show in a public place.

Goring's Bell: More important than the Euro!

It was eventually erected on a brick-built plinth next to the war memorial. And, there it remained until a few weeks ago when, a tourist from Hamburg, saw it, read the inscription, and promptly complained to the State Governor. As is the way in modern Germany, the State Governor raised the issue with a higher authority and rumour has it, that eventually Chancellor Angela Merkel had to break off talks about bailing out the Euro, and deal with the Nazi bell of Tumlaur-Koog! Advisors to the Chancellor warned that the bell, if allowed to stay on display, could become a place of pilgrimage for tens of thousands of Nazis from all over the world. Although the birth of a massive tourist industry, and the income it would bring, would be welcomed by many in Tumlaur-Koog, it must not be allowed.

The answer was typically post-war German, to "airbrush out" inconvenient parts of German history. Goring's bell has now been removed from public display and placed in secure storage.

Flanders

Flemish nationalists are promising "mass action" against the appointment of, Elio Di Rupo as the new Prime Minister of Belgium. Di Rupo, who is openly gay, does not even speak Flemish, the language of the majority of the country. The country is split into 6.5 million Dutch-speaking Flemish people, and 4.5 million French-speaking Walloons.

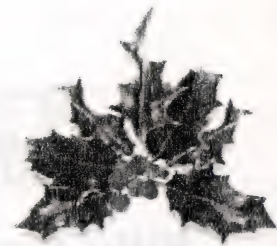

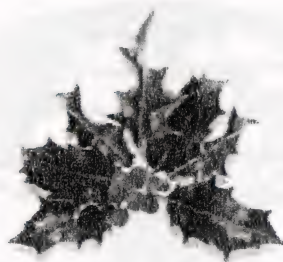

The country has not had a Prime Minister or working Cabinet since the national elections in June 2010. King Albert of Belgium appointed a caretaker government after parties failed to agree on a new structure.

Di Rupo's political background is that of a life-long socialist, who became the leader of the French-speaking, Walloon Socialist Party. He has assembled a cabinet of 13 Ministers and 6 State Secretaries, cobbled together from the three main parties. Flemish nationalists advocate the establishment of a Flemish Republic, completely separate from Belgium.

Flemish MEPs have joined the, "European Alliance for Freedom," block in the European Parliament. Also in the block are, UKIP, the Austrian FPÖ, Sweden Democrats, and the Lithuanian Order and Justice Party.

Heritage – Culture – Identity

YULETIDE and the WINTER SOLSTICE

The traditional Festival of Yule and the Winter Solstice have largely vanished into the Christian festival of Christmas, itself now challenged by politically correct councils to vanish it into a non-religious "Winter Festival". But what is Yuletide and the Winter Solstice? Both of which were celebrated by our North European ancestors long before Christianity?

To our ancestors living in the forests and on the frozen plains of Northern Europe, the Winter Solstice was an important religious event. Also known as the festival of Yule it celebrated the end of the dark days of winter, and the coming of the new spring. For the Solstice marked the shortest day and longest night of the year. It is also the turning point of the year, as following the longest night, the sun begins to grow stronger in the sky and gradually the days become longer again. From a religious perspective it is a celebration of rebirth and hope for the future. Several ancient sites of "standing stones" are aligned to catch the birth of the new dawn.

The festival of Yule goes by different names throughout Nordic Europe, Jul in Scandinavia, and Jol in old Icelandic. The Prose Edda has references to the Yule festival as does the Ynglinga saga, which mentions a Yule feast lasting three nights. Although in some parts of Europe the festival went on for twelve nights. Feasting as part of the Yule festival seems common practice throughout, with records of toasts being drunk first to Odin for "victory" and then to the gods Njoror and Freyr "for good harvests and for peace".

Fire also played a vital part in the celebrations with the Yule log being burnt on a ceremonial fire and candles or specially prepared lanterns being lit.

Many Pagan dwellers of the great forests that covered much of Northern Europe worshipped "gods of nature" such as the Green Man. This figure was depicted as having two sides, one made of Holly, the Holly King, and the other of Oak, the Oak King.

In winter, when nature is dormant and most trees have shed their leaves the Holly King, an evergreen, rules supreme. Following the Winter Solstice, as mother earth warms up, the Oak springs back to life and the Oak King rules again. Thus is the everlasting cycle of nature.

The "Green Man"

Even after Europe began to convert to Christianity the Festival of Yule was still celebrated. In AD 730, the "Father of English History" the Venerable Bede, recorded that the Pagan Yule festival was still being celebrated in parts of Britain, and in AD 840, King Haakon, the first Christian King of Norway, mentions Yule feasts continue to be held throughout his icebound Kingdom.

Eventually the Christian church generally supplanted the Yule Festival and the Winter Solstice with its own Christmas festival, and although there is no historical proof that Jesus Christ was born in mid-December, the popular time of the Yule festival was convenient, and thus the 25th of December became Christmas.

Many of the Pagan symbols are still retained within the Christmas festival today. With most homes having central heating rather than an open hearth, the sacred Yule Log is now fashioned into a chocolate cake! Instead of candles and specially made lanterns, we now decorate our homes with Christmas "lights" powered by electricity. We still remember the "God of Winter" the Holly King, but now he is represented in the shape of a Holly wreath, fixed to our front door.

As it was a religious festival our Pagan forefathers used the Winter Solstice to offer special prayers to their Gods, and today we should do the same. At this sacred time of rebirth, prayers are offered for the health and happiness of our immediate family and of our kith and kin wherever they may be.

Pray also for kinsmen far from their hearth and home, imprisoned for their political beliefs. They must never be forgotten.

Pray also for victories to come against those that wish to destroy Our Race, Our Nation, and Our way of Life!

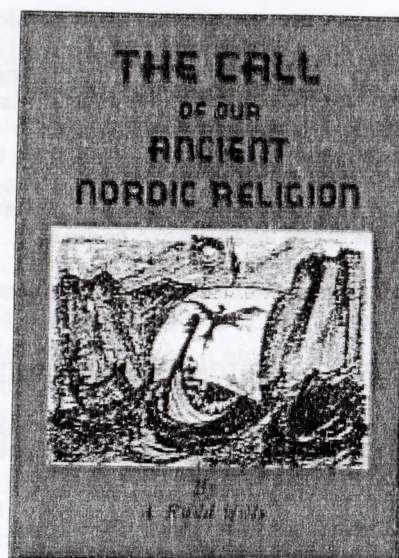

A Merry Yule to you all.

 The astronomical date for this years Winter Solstice takes place at 00.22 GMT on the 22nd of December

Many books and articles have been written on this subject, most of which tend to be one-sided. Such works are of limited value to the serious researchers as they are usually unbalanced in the selection of source material and often tendentious in its use. Even fair and balanced works on the subject rarely reflect the detail, context and true motivation that only the actual words of those involved can convey.
